Item 6. Describe the Issuer's Business, Products and Services

A. Description of the Issuer's Business Operations: Hop-on, Inc. (HPNN.PK) Since 2003, the Company has continually obtained essential patent portfolio license agreements for mobile communications, computing and home entertainment devices.

These carefully negotiated "have made" license rights permit Hop-on to have patented products made by third parties, in addition to the standard rights to "make, use and sell". The license rights to essential patents has been from Qualcomm, Motorola, InterDigital, Lucent, NEC, Alcatel, Ericsson, Philips, Siemens, and now from an Android platform, give Hop-on a stronger position to manufacture, market and distribute than the likes of Samsung or Apple. Hop-on has also signed a LTLO license agreement with Nokia.

Worldwide patent law amendments have allowed patent owners a more aggressive means of preventing patent infringement than was previously unavailable, including the ability to pursue injunctive relief. While headlines abound with patent wars among Samsung, Apple and Google, patent owners are also winning judgments against the many less known manufacturers in evolving markets, such as China.

With insurmountable judgments levied against some Chinese firms, many are being forced to adjust their business practices. Working with a holder of “have made” licenses, like Hop-on, permits existing Chinese and other international firms to continue in business, forgoing the need for audits that would identify years of non-compliance and provide the evidence needed for compensatory damages.

Hop-on has intimate relationships with many Chinese manufacturers and has a history of successfully monetizing patent portfolios under Hop-on and other brands. It is now uniquely positioned to fill an ever increasing gap in the Chinese OEM and ODM mobile communications, computing and home entertainment devices marketplace

Hop-on is well known for the invention of the disposable cell phone in 2001, being named one of the "Top Ten Inventions of the Year" by Time magazine. The disposable and rechargeable phone market is now a billion dollar industry.

As a leading technology solutions innovator and with diverse mobile and electronics holdings, Hop-on continues to develop its real-time interactive gaming software for use with mobile and broadband connected device.

Currently Hop-on IP of California is not in good standing due to filing the State and Federal Taxes. Those tax returns have now been filed.
